Banaras Hindu University, a leading institution of higher learning in India, is establishing a Centre for Vedic Research. It has received the support of India’s Prime Minister, Narendra Modi, who laid the foundation for the Centre last autumn.

The Centre will explore ancient Vedic texts related to various sciences and conduct multidisciplinary research.

The Head of the Veda Department, Upendra Kumar Tripathi explained:

“The Centre will study the past glory of Vedic sciences and work towards popularizing the scientific approach and vision of the Vedic seers. The Indian wisdom and knowledge tradition developed many branches, which may be seen in the form of a luminous literature on various subjects, like the sciences of rituals, agamas, dramaturgy, music, architecture, astrology, astronomy and cosmology, medicine, surgery, military strategy, yoga, mathematics, metallurgy, etc. The Centre will focus on all of these aspects.”

A state-of-the-art research laboratory will study and research the effects of Vedic mantras, rituals, yoga and meditation on the human mind through neuropsychological studies.

The Centre will also collect Vedic manuscripts for publication, prepare course material on Vedic scientific knowledge for inclusion in existing courses, and fill up the absence of Vedic Sciences in various scientific texts currently taught in educational institutions.

Ayurveda, Yoga and Meditation at Graz University

On March 20 Dr med Rainer Picha, chairman of IMAVF, presented an elective lecture to a capacity audience of medical students at the University of Graz. Students at this university have demonstrated a very lively interest in preventative and alternative medicine. Another presentation by a representative from the regional health insurance organization responsible for preventative medicine emphasized the importance of stress management and cited Transcendental Meditation as the only method that is as effective as blood pressure medicine.

Maharishi AyurVeda on the Move!
Dr Robert Schneider’s Tour for Total Health

Delhi, India • University of California, Irvine • Rishikesh, India • Scott’s Valley California, USA • Miami, Florida USA

This past spring, Robert Schneider, MD, FACC, Dean of MUM’s College of Integrative Medicine, traveled across the globe to champion the integration of the knowledge and technologies of Maharishi AyurVeda into the worlds of modern medicine and natural traditional medicine.

Dr Schneider attended six prestigious conferences, where over a thousand doctors, medical students and ayurvedic practitioners were inspired by the holistic, science-based approach of Maharishi AyurVeda.

February 2019 – University of California at Irvine
Dr Schneider Speaks to Hundreds of Doctors & Medical Students.
The medical profession continues to show increasing interest in the Transcendental Meditation® technique, both for medical care and for physician wellness and prevention of burnout.

The Medical School at the University of California at Irvine is considering making the TM® technique available for physician wellness, and 200 doctors attended Dr Schneider’s presentation on the role of stress in cardiovascular disease and the research that shows that the TM® technique prevents and treats heart disease and its risk factor, such as high blood pressure, stress and atherosclerosis.

“Physician burnout is now recognized as a major issue,” Dr Schneider said. “The residents and medical students were keen to stay balanced and healthy as they train in the science and art of medicine. They were receptive and understand from personal experience the importance of dealing with chronic fatigue and stress.”

Dr Schneider also met with another 50 physicians and spouses involved with the Indian Medical Association of Southern California. He presented Maharishi’s vision for Vedic health care that includes mind, body, and environment – all based on the inner intelligence of the body and the universe. “These doctors were very interested in how science is now verifying the principles and benefits of their own tradition of Ayurveda,” Dr Schneider said. “My presentation helped to bridge the gap between modern science and ancient Vedic science.”

March 2019 – Rishikesh, India
The All India Institute for Medical Sciences – considered to be one of the top hospitals and medical schools in India – hosted Dr Schneider’s feature presentation on Maharishi AyurVeda as a comprehensive mind-body-environment system based on the inner intelligence of nature at the World’s First Conference on Meditation and Cardiovascular Disease.

“These modern doctors and scientists know that this is their ancient tradition, but they want to be contemporary and science-based,” said Dr Schneider. “They were very inspired by our research giving a modern scientific framework to their tradition.”

The faculty at the All India Institute for Medical Sciences Ayurveda are eager to collaborate with Dr Schneider on a large clinical study on hypertension that would be conducted in India. They are particularly interested in using technology such as PET and fMRI to differentiate among approaches to meditation regarding its physiological effects on the brain and heart. In addition, 40 have already learned the TM technique, and several hundred more plan to learn.

March 2019 – Delhi, India
Dr Schneider’s presentation on Maharishi’s Contributions to Ayurveda: Total Knowledge for Total Health at the All India Institute of Ayurveda in Delhi was enthusiastically received.
April 2019 – Scott’s Valley, California USA
Dr Schneider gave two talks at the well-attended National Ayurvedic Medical Association (NAMA) conference on Ayurveda and the Mind, which was co-sponsored by the Government of India’s AYUSH. www.ayurvedanama.org/conference-overview

He presented a broad understanding of Yoga in Ayurveda, that emphasizes union with one’s inner healing self. Meditation is a vehicle for achieving this union, and that’s backed by scientific evidence on health benefits of the Transcendental Meditation technique.

Dr Schneider also presented insights of modern medicine on Jyotish or Vedic astrology in Ayurveda. He explained that modern medicine recognizes the timing of disease onset and treatment in chronomedicine. He described how Jyotish helps to fulfill the goals of medicine for personalized, preventive, predictive, and participatory health care.

April 2019 - Miami Florida, USA
At a conference of the Age Management Medicine Group (AMMG) held in Miami Dr Schneider spoke to hundreds of MDs on how the mind-body connection can speed up or slow down the aging process.

“The contribution of lifestyle to aging is becoming a major theme in contemporary medicine, so these physicians were fascinated to hear how Transcendental Meditation can modify aging,” Dr Schneider said. “This was the only session to show research on how science supports the mind-body connection.”

Dr Schneider also presented research showing that the Transcendental Meditation technique mitigates a range of physiological conditions associated with aging.

Ayurveda, a Foundation for Integrative Medicine

Dr med Walter Mölk, Director, Maharishi College of Perfect Health International, The Netherlands; Founder, Austrian Society of Ayurvedic Medicine (1986)

Integrative medicine is characterised by a holistic approach to the patient, including all aspects of lifestyle, and the combination of different types of both conventional and alternative therapies.

Perfect health, according to Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, is a state of perfect integration:

‘When the total intelligence of Natural Law, the Veda, is lively in the individual physiology there is perfect synchrony between the functioning of every individual cell and the holistic functioning of the body as a whole and between individual intelligence and cosmic intelligence. In this state of complete integration our thoughts and actions are spontaneously in harmony with Natural Law and the individual enjoys perfect health. This is a state of perfect integration.’
Ayurvedic texts (Sushrut Samhitā) mention that a Vaidya should not only study Ayurveda but also other fields of science. Maharishi AyurVeda has its foundation in many different disciplines, such as Vedic Science and Technology as revived by Maharishi, the classical Ayurvedic texts, the discovery of Veda in the physiology by Professor Tony Nader, modern physics and cosmology, medical research and clinical experience, modern biology including genetics and epigenetics, chronobiology, personalised and predictive medicine, and scientific theories such as systems theory, self-organisation and chaos theory. The common basis for all these different disciplines is the state of least excitation of our own consciousness, which is a state of perfect health. Health is wholeness, a state of perfect integration.

Maharishi AyurVeda uses a multimodality approach covering the whole range of natural law, from the abstract unmanifest field that underlies creation to all the expressed levels of human life including the environment. These treatment modalities have an age-old tradition and many of them have been researched and the results published in peer-reviewed scientific journals. This approach also includes diagnostic methods and treatments of modern medicine, and systems of natural medicine with a long tradition and/or scientific studies proving their effectiveness.

Maharishi AyurVeda is primarily a prevention-oriented system that considers influences on health that are not usually taken into account by conventional medicine, including development of consciousness in the individual and society (increased level of coherence in collective consciousness), the near environment (architectural design and city planning) and the distant environment (cosmic influences from our solar system and the stars). The goal of all these approaches is, besides addressing specific health concerns, to enliven the inner intelligence of the body and create an ideal atmosphere for personal development and growth in a peaceful and affluent society.

Definition of Perfect Health

SWA - STHYA

“Established in one’s own Self”

Established in Total Natural Law

The different levels of health (mental, physical, behavioural, social and environmental) can only be integrated at their source in pure being, the innermost aspect of our existence.

Ayurveda describes the range of our existence as one integrated field, the Self (Ātmā), which, when it becomes aware of itself, expresses itself as Vedic sounds, then as the body (Sharīr), and finally as the ever-expanding universe (Vishwa). If we are able to integrate all these levels in our own consciousness then we have achieved a state of perfect integration, perfect health, totality (Brahm).

The principle of Loka – Purusha – Samya is an important Ayurvedic concept. Loka is the universe, Purusha the person and Samya means equal. It means that the universe and the person are connected, they are actually one: ‘As is the microcosm, so is the macrocosm.’

Professor Nader has shown in his book Human Physiology – Expression of Veda and the Vedic Literature that the cosmic influences of the planets and the stars have their counterparts in our physiology, for example in the basal ganglia of the brain and in the cranial nerves (illustrated in the chart below, taken from Dr Nader’s book). This discovery is a verification and practical application of the principle of Loka – Purusha – Samya and it explains the diagnostic and therapeutic effect of Vedic astrology (Jyotish and Yagya).

* A Volume 1–7 Scientific Research on the Transcendental Meditation and TM-Sidhi Programme: Collected Papers

A Human Physiology – Expression of Veda and the Vedic Literature, Modern Science and Ancient Vedic Science Discover the Fabrics of Immortality in the Human Physiology, Tony Nader, MD, PhD, Fifth Edition, 2014 Maharishi Press
The fundamental qualities of consciousness express themselves in the different sounds of the Veda, and are then transformed into the structures of the physiology. For example the three Doshas have their origin in consciousness. Maharishi defined consciousness as that which is conscious of itself. That means consciousness has a threefold structure: the knower (Rishi), the process of knowing (Devatā), and the known (Chhandas). On he level of self-referral consciousness these three are one (Samhitā). The relationship between these three elements of consciousness forms the basis of the three governing principles of physiology: Vāta, Pitta, and Kapha.

On the right side of the chart below we see the various preventive and therapeutic modalities of Maharishi AyurVeda. According to Charaka there are three basic types of therapies: spiritual therapies (Daiva Vyaprashaya), rational therapies (Yukti Vyapashraya) including diet, herbs, massage, Pancha Karma, etc., and psychological therapies (Sattvavajaya).

Integrative medicine means that aspects of all three categories of therapies have to be included (see chart above). However, integration is not achieved just by mixing together modern medicine, Ayurveda, Chinese medicine, aroma therapy, homeopathy, massage, Yoga therapy, etc. Whatever systems we choose, their integration is possible only at the level of the state of least excitation of consciousness (Ātmā).

When we want Ayurveda to be globally introduced as a prevention-oriented natural health care system we have to expand it to its full value. This requires an expansion on the vertical level to connect the different therapies with our own self-referral consciousness and with the environment and the whole cosmos, and a horizontal expansion to include all the forty aspects of Veda and the Vedic literature. This holistic expansion is a unique feature of Maharishi AyurVeda.

Finally, I want to mention that irrespective of the medical system practised, the quality of compassion and love of the physician is an important basis of true integrative medicine.
New Study Finds TM Enhances Social-Emotional Learning
Most Dramatic Benefit Shown in Hi-Risk 10-11 Year Old Students

Secondary school students practicing the Transcendental Meditation® technique as part of a school Quiet Time programme had significant improvements in social-emotional competencies and psychological distress, according to a new study published in Education.

“Social-emotional learning is gaining increased recognition as an important goal of education, said MUM professor Sandy Nidich, study coauthor and director of the MUM Center for Social-Emotional Health and Consciousness. “Competencies such as self-awareness, self-management, social awareness, relationship skills, and goal-directed behavior help students perform better academically and promote enhanced emotional and social well being.”

The study compared 51 sixth-grade students who took part in a Quiet Time programme with twice-daily practice of Transcendental Meditation to 50 students from a matched control school within the same West Coast public school district.

Results showed a significant increase in overall social-emotional competency in the Transcendental Meditation group compared to controls over a four-month period. The effects were particularly pronounced in high-risk subgroups, which experienced a significant increase on social-emotional competency and a significant decrease on emotional problems compared to controls.

Specific improvement was found in the areas of decision-making, goal-directed behavior, personal responsibility, relationship skills, and optimism.

Laurent Valosek was lead author of the study; coauthors included Randi Nidich from MUM, Jamie Grant, and Staci Wendt from WestEd Research in California.
